

About AAU

The oldest private university in the country, Anglo-American University (AAU), Prague, Czech Republic, cultivates a global learning environment, promoting analytical, creative and practical thinking in the pursuit of academic excellence. AAU is the first independent Europe institution to receive the Western Association of Schools and Colleges (WASC) accreditation recognized by the U.S. Department of Education.

AAU places emphasis on small, interactive classes with a focus on critical and creative thinking, effective communication, and flexibility. AAU offers 14 undergraduate and graduate programs, with courses provided in English. The quality of teaching is guaranteed by a personalized approach with low 8:1 student to faculty ratio. With students from over 70 countries, campus demographics include American, Chinese, Czech, French, Italian, Kazakh, Russian, Slovak, Spanish, and other international students.

AAU cooperates with companies and organizations to enrich the learning experience, interact with the community around us, and prepare achievers to make a positive difference in their careers. Internships are typically included as a part of the curriculum.

As a not-for-profit university, AAU continually reinvests in the betterment of its community and educational models. We work together with our internationally diverse student body to develop a sense of ethical consciousness and social responsibility towards each other and the globe.

AAU cooperates with many academic partners, in the USA in particular, in terms of faculty and student exchange, joint research and teaching activities, and study abroad programs. Chapman University, Kent State University, Norwich University are primary AAU partners in the university segment. University of Hawaii Community College System, West Valley College, Highline College are the pilot partners in the community college segment.
