

I am pleased to announce that Kerry Kilber Rebman has been selected as the Interim Associate Vice Chancellor of Technology, beginning April 1. In her role, Kerry will supervise the Information Technology Department and provide leadership for technology needs as we begin transitioning back to the campuses. She will be implementing a project management and tracking system in Information Technology that includes ongoing communication with the user community, and will also be leading the efforts to fulfill the objectives for Information Technology that were recommended by the Institutional Effectiveness Partnership Initiative team.

Kerry will remain in this interim role while we develop a reorganization plan for the department.

As a GCCCD employee since 2010, Kerry is a familiar face to many at the Cuyamaca and Grossmont College campuses. She has served for almost eight years as the Dean of Learning and Technology at Cuyamaca College, and previously served in the same position at Grossmont College.

Kerry has a wide and deep knowledge of the district's technology needs and challenges. For the last five months, she has been conducting an assessment of the Information Technology Department and previously played a lead role in the 2016 and 2017 business process analyses of the department.

Kerry started her career in education teaching German to kindergarteners in Georgia. She then worked as a director and administrative director at the University of San Diego before coming to GCCCD. She has a bachelor's degree in German from Minnesota State University and a master's degree in nonprofit leadership and management from the University of San Diego.

Please join me in welcoming Kerry to her new role.
